ANECDOTES OF THE RACE .- "Our boys" tell a good many anecdotes about the Yankees engaged in the battle at Bethel on Monday last. A few of these we propose to dot down for the amusement of our readers. It is related that while Old Abe's fellows were in full flight along the road towards Hampton, and long after the Southern troops had ceased to chase them, several of them overtook an old negro woman on the road; being nearly out of breath they looked round, and finding no enemy immediately behind them, one of them said, "For God's sake, old woman, do tell us how many men Gen. Magruder had in that battle." "Bress your soul, honey, I do'no 'zackly, but I hear de white folks say de Gen'ral had a whole heap, at least a thousand." "Come, Jake, don't let's stop yet, then. Ain't it a great wonder them cavalry chaps hadn't surrounded our army and cut us all to pieces." And having satisfied themselves thus much, they renewed their race | wife was a believer. towards Hampton at 2:40 speed. We do not vouch for the truth of this, and as it was told by the old woman herself, we have no way of proving it, as the negro's evidence will not be received in court. Another anecdote, we understand, was told by some of their own men. It is that Gen. Eutler was riding about a church, appointed for the dying, were not administered mile from Hampton, when his troops came dashing down to Mr. Douglas. the road at full tilt. Recognizing a captain among them, Butler accosted him and asked him what they were running so for. The captain, panting for breath, told him, "There's a whole lot of Southern gentlemen chasing us "
